

ARE YOUR GOLF BALLS GOOD FOR YOUR GAME!

Golf is the only game in the world where you have to make the same movement over and over again as consistently as possible. I was very surprised through recent talks with some members here at Forrester Park that not many people play with the same golf ball throughout a round let alone a month's golf. How can you be consistent if your equipment keeps changing?

I understand that money is an issue when you're not quite playing to your full potential. (And believe me I can relate to you), it doesn't hurt your wallet as much when you hit a 50p lake ball back to its rightful place in the pond on the first. Than it does to painfully watch your £3.50 Pro V1 you marked with your Sharpie pen sink slowly to the dark deeps of its watery grave.

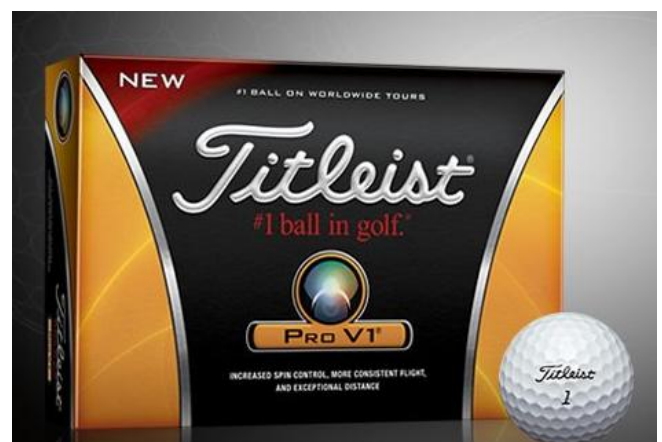

Please don't get me wrong, I am not telling you to go and buy the top of the range balls, but what I am saying is find a ball that is correct for your swing speed and ball flight and stick to that golf ball, until your ability progresses and you change to a new ball that suits your new style of play.

There are plenty of balls on the market, I have given a detailed description of the Titleist range of balls and also shown other makes and balls that fall into the same bracket. I hope this helps.

Titleist Pro v1 (top of the range)

Taylormade tp Black/ Callaway Tour i s

This is a top of the range ball that offers distance and durability alike, and now also delivers increased spin control with a more consistent flight. This is an advanced golf ball that creates slightly more spin than its sister ball the Pro V1x. The Pro V1 should be used for players with good club head speed of 90 M.P.H plus with the driver and who are looking for professional control. If a player hits a low penetrating flight and wants to see it fly higher use the Pro V1.

ARE YOUR GOLF BALLS GOOD FOR YOUR GAME!

Titleist Pro V1x (top of the range)

TaylorMade Penta tp/ Callaway Tour i z

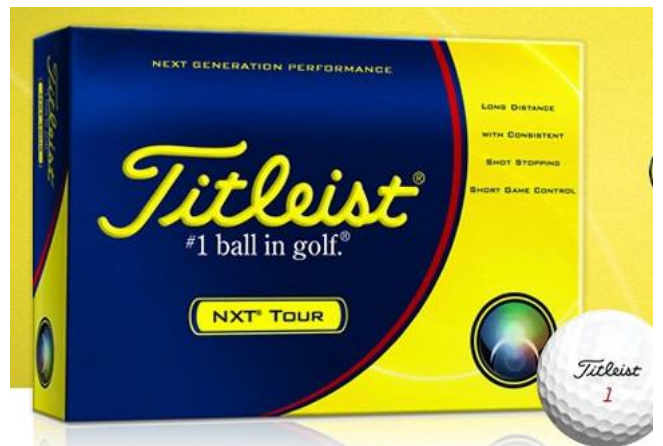

The Pro V1x offers very low spin with the driver and longer irons yet still maintains its spin and control around the greens. It is durable and allows for consistent ball flights. This ball should be used by players again with club head of 90 plus with the driver and is looking for professional feel. If a player hits the ball high and wants to keep it lower the Pro V1X is the ball for you.

Titleist NXT Tour (Middle range)

TaylorMade Burner Tour/ Callaway HX Diablo Tour

This golf ball is for players seeking longer shots with the driver and longer irons, yet want to keep the soft feel and touch around the greens for spin control. These balls are far more durable than the Pro V1 range. The type of player that should use this golf ball should be player with Club head speed between 70-90 M.P.H, and is serious about improving their golf.

Titleist DT SOLO (Bottom range)

TaylorMade Burner/ Callaway Warbird Plus

These golf balls are designed for a wide range of golfers, looking for exceptional distance over the soft feel around the greens. These types of balls also offer the most durability and have cut proof technology which means the outside shell is firm and will not split or scuff easily. This ball should be used by player with swing speeds under 70 M.P.H, who need a few extra yards.
